SATURDAY SELECTS THE WEEK OF APRIL 14

04.19.14 — BY MONICA KHEMSUROV

A weekly Saturday recap to share with you our favorite links, discoveries, exhibitions, and more from the past seven days. This week, we resume the series with our last (no, really) Milan fair roundup, plus our favorite new shopping destination in L.A., two exhibitions of nominally functional furnishings, and a ghostly faded mirror that makes for a nice addition to the genre's current craze.

The new glassware brand J. Hill's Standard has an equally cool backstory: It was started by a Waterford-based entrepreneur who realized the storied company was no longer hand-making its wares, leaving the skills of local artisans to wither. Its first collection includes a series by Martino Gamper and one by Scholten & Baijings, pictured above (photo by Tom Brown).
